STOCKTON'S SERVICEMEN

1,245 servicemen from Stockton died during 'the Great War', and are listed on the Stockton War Memorial. In each newsletter the men who died during that month/period will be recorded, along with any information gathered about their lives.

Private John Joseph Hardy:

Regiment: 2nd Battalion Royal Scots (Lothian Regiment) Fusiliers.

Date of Death: 7 August 1914.

Age: 28 years

Place of Burial: Weston Mill Cemetery, Plymouth

Private Hardy was born in West Hartlepool, and joined the army in 1905 at the age of 19. Although Private Hardy did not die whilst fighting in the 'great war', he had been fighting for his country for nearly ten years, and had served abroad, including India. Private Hardy was on his way to the front with his battalion, when he collapsed on 7th August 1914 with severe abdominal pains. Hardy's condition rapidly deteriorated, and doctors concluded it was impossible to operate. Private Hardy died at 9:30 that evening. Private Hardy left a widow, Frances Elizabeth Hardy, who remarried in 1919 to Michael McNarra/McNamara.

Private James William Ingledeu:

Regiment: 18th Battalion (Queen Mary's Own Royal) Hussars, Household Cavalry and Cavalry of the Line (incl. Yeomanry and Imperial Camel Corps).

Date of Death: 24 August 1914.

Age: 22 years.

Place of Burial: Elouges Communal Cemetery, Belgium.

Ingledeu left England for the last time, on 16 August 1914, departing from Southampton. He arrived with his battalion in Boulogne the following day. Private Ingledeu died whilst fighting in the action of Elouges on 24 August, when British forces were retreating, following their defeat at Mons.

*'...At the going down of the sun and in the morning,
We will remember them.'*

AN AUGUST 1914 RECIPE

Concerns over rising food prices, and food shortages were rife from the beginning of the war. Simple recipes, such as this one taken from the Evening Gazette, were promoted to encourage people to make the most of their finite supplies.

Butter Tarts:

Ingredients

- One egg
- One cup of granulated sugar
- Butter the size of an egg
- One-fourth cup of milk
- One cup of currants

Method

Put all ingredients together and boil until like soft custard; flavour and cook. When cool put in tart shells and serve.
